Intro

When I worked in FEO digital agency, sales got a client for us who had a big e-shop that sells coffee from the whole world.

- longer supported CMS.

• Client wasn't happy with lost revenue due to static web site that had no mobile version.

• He was also not happy with outdated and no

My role in this project

I was a one man UX team and my role was:

- UX Researcher
- UX Designer
- I was also responsible for selling each UX design stage to the client

I also had a junior UX colleague who I was mentoring at that time.

How it started?

I worked in digital agency where we specializated on e-commerce solution for businesses.

- Time was right
- Amount of projects pouring in was constant
- And sales brought in yet another project
- This time it was in field of coffee

I am drinking like 5-6 coffees per day so it would be great opportunity to learn more >>>

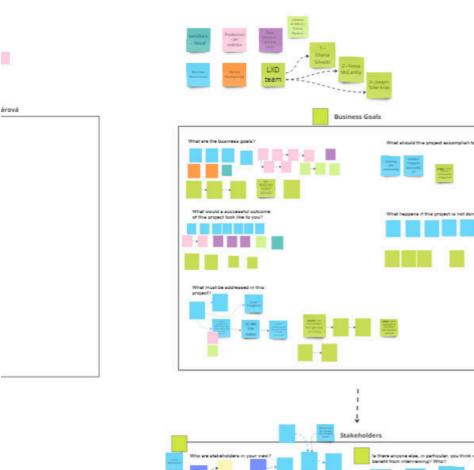

UX workshop

We had a whole day workshop where we were concentrating on many areas so we can understand the business better.

- What is your business goal?
- Who is your audience and customers
- Who are your competitors?
- What is your Product?
- What are the biggest risks?
- How we going to measure success?
- and many more

//////

• What is your current technical solution?

Roles & R

- (video and audio)

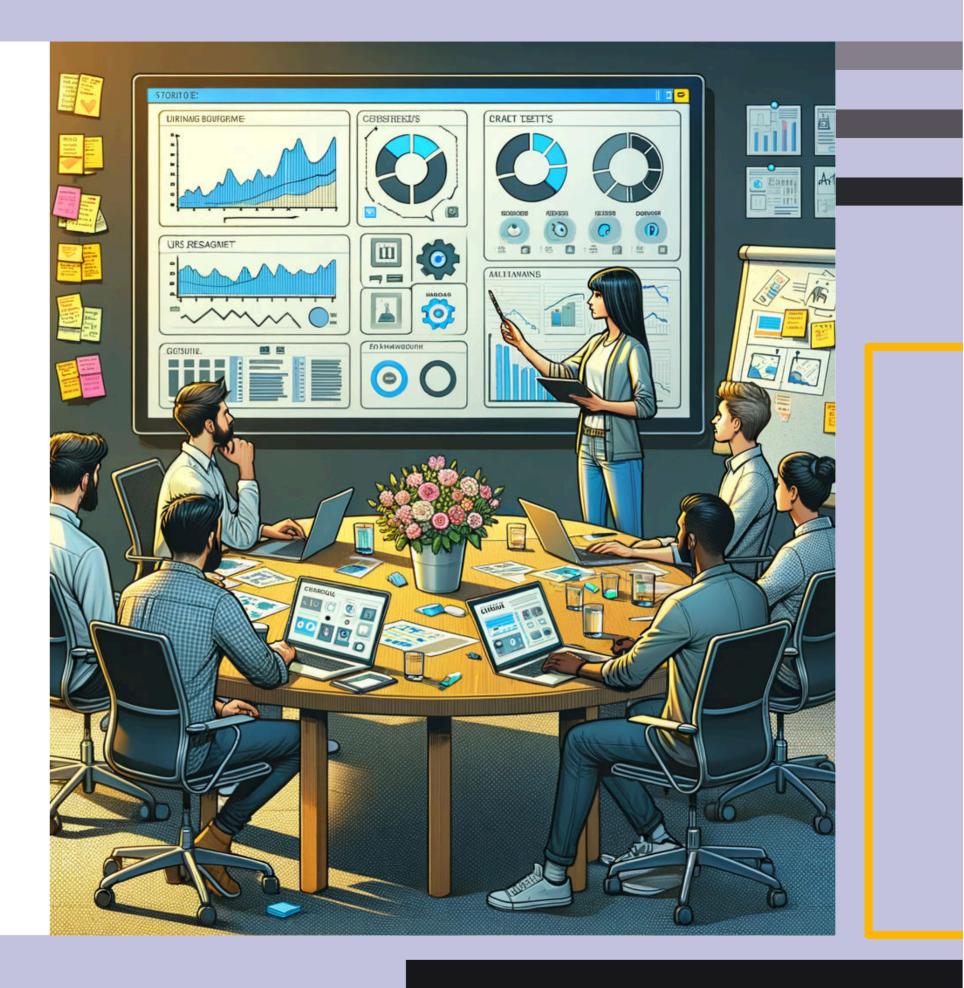

• I used Miro to note all the important notes • Whole session was recorded on 2 devices

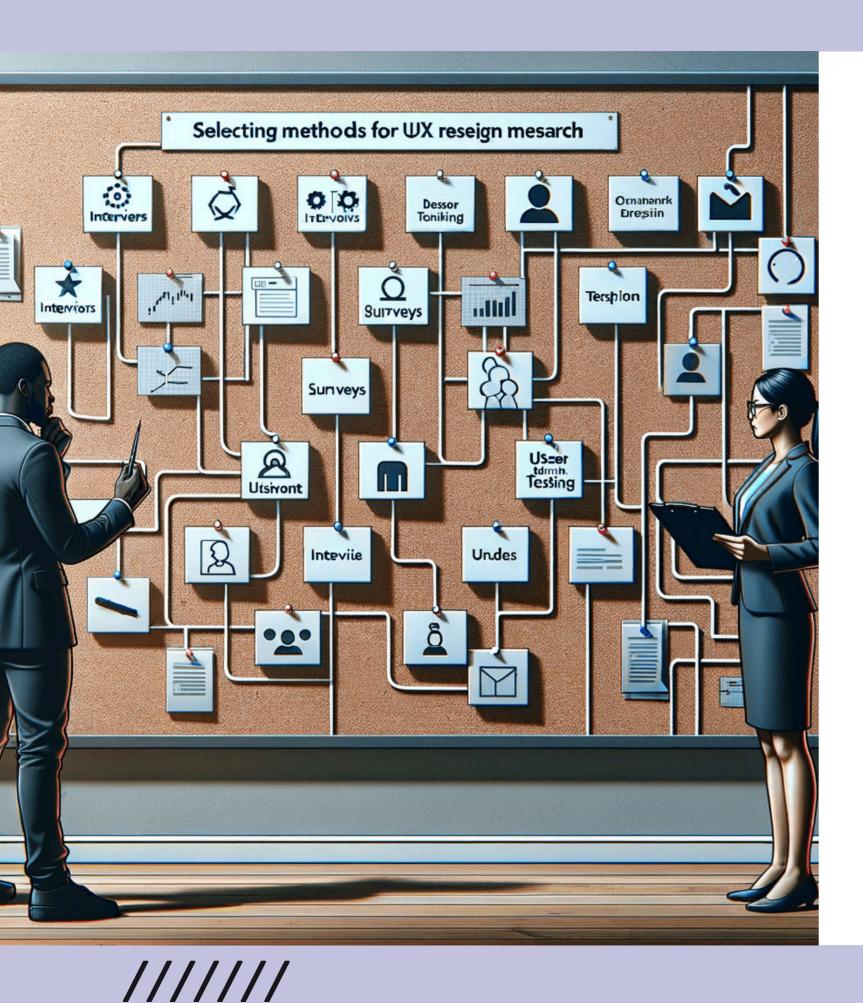

Time to analyse

Next step was to analyze the whole workshop and set a UX research methods that would help us to understand where to pay attention to.

Workshop insights:

- Lost conversion due to non-responsive design
- Outdated e-shop management system that was no longer supported
- Need to understand what users really want
- Client expectation was to boost its sales with redesign!

UX methodic used

Based on the UX workshop results, we selected UX methodic as bellow:

- 2. Competitor analyses
- 3. Google Analytic analyses
- 4. Hotjar surveys
- 5. Creation of Personas

Further usability testing of wireframes and its iteration was also planned at the next stage.

1. Usability testing of the current web site

1. Usability testing of current web site

It is one of my favorite technique as it answers the 'why' users do what they do.

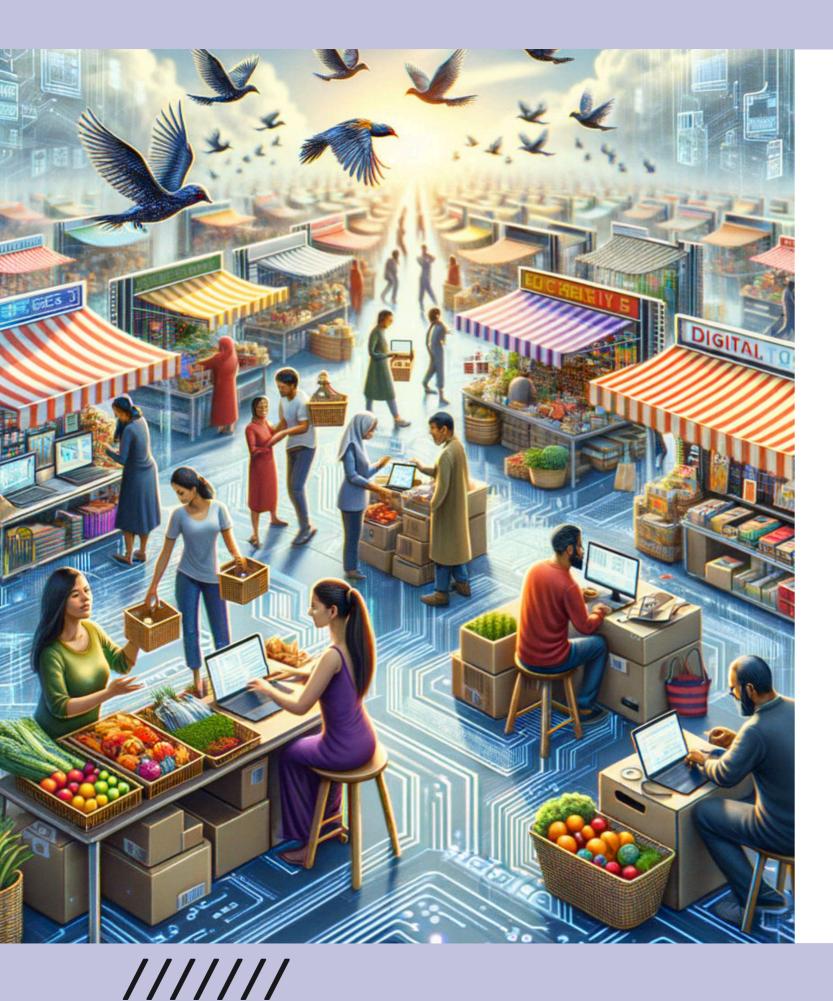

- Script scenario was put together and verified with the team and client
- Client got for us 6 testers (one as pilot test) • Incentive of 500 crowns per test for each user
- Each test took approximately an one hour
- We received great feedback on the current e-shop that helped us understand more in detail

Usability test insights

- Users mainly had problem with no mobile version.
- Bad search results.
- Weird logic for navigation.
- They also would like more personalization.

- Repeated shopping. • Loyalty club. • Discounts options.

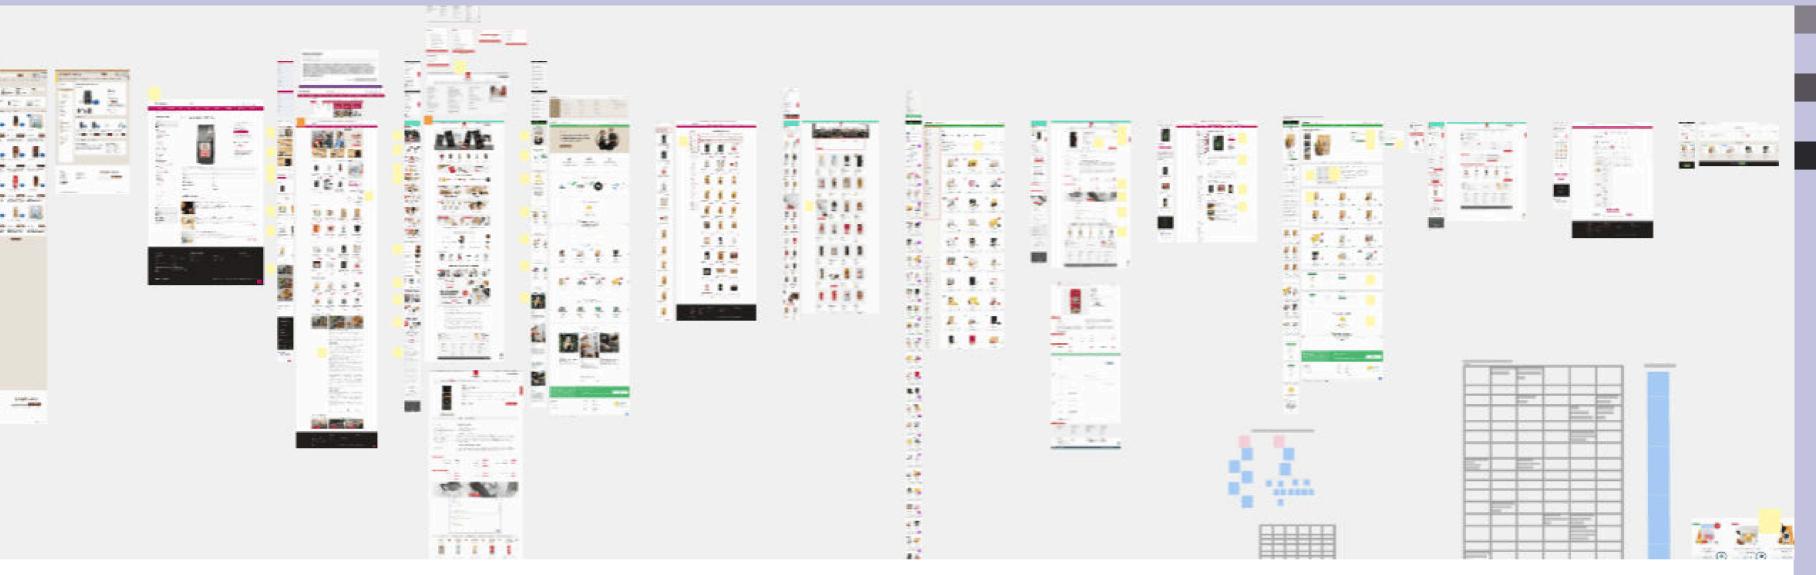

2. Competitor analyses

Another part of research was to check what the competitors do.

- Top Competitors: I went through 5 competitors that customer mentioned during UX workshop

- Product or Service Offerings
- User Experience and Usability
- Customer Service and Support
- Strengths and Weaknesses
- Pricing Strategies
- Technological Advancements

Competitor analyses

Research insight:

- All competitors had mobile version.
- Better product description.
- Better laid out product overview pages.
- Easier check out.
- Some had better support.

I used Miro and simple table to compare differences

3. Google Analytic analyses

Huge insight was via Google Analytics.

- mobile (73,04 %).
- e-shop.
- brands.
- the target on mobile.

Hotjar surveys

This was also very interesting insight. We had 324 respondents that gave us good insight into what users wanted

- How satisfied users are when shipping
- Would they recommend the shop
- What they are frustrated with
- What they love
- Do they know what they want?
- (navigation, Information architecture)

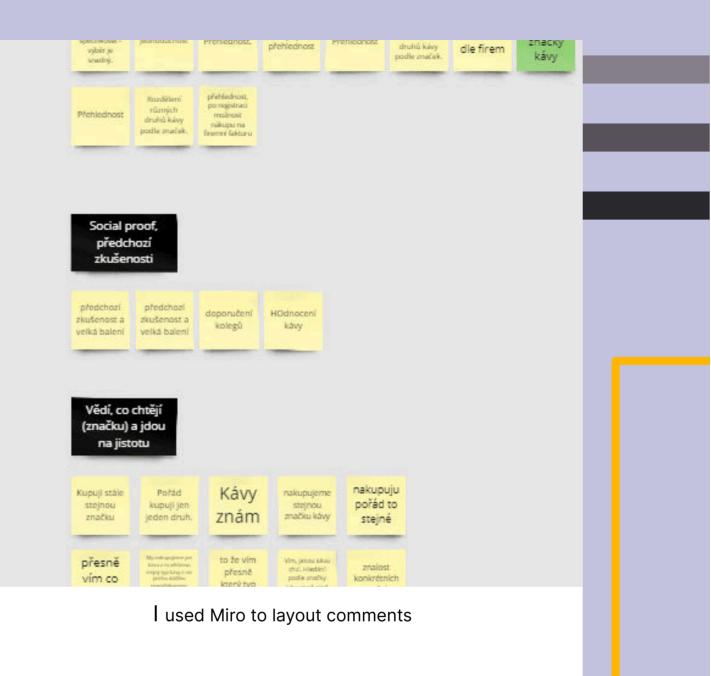

• What is important for them when shopping for coffee A, B, C D etc. (Product detail page)

• How easy is for them to find what they want

Hotjar surveys insights:

- Users wanted to be able to try coffee samples. (hygienically not possible).
- E-shop information was considered chaotic.
- Shopping cart redirection every time you add goods to a cart.
- No mobile version of the web site.
- Users in general wanted to see more information about the product.

Wireframe it all!

Our research gave us enough information to move to the next stage and I could start preparing wireframes.

- We knew that web needs new admin panel for the users.
- Web needs mobile version.
- Product overview and detail could be build based on data from the previous research.
- Whole cart flow needed redesign.

Mobile first

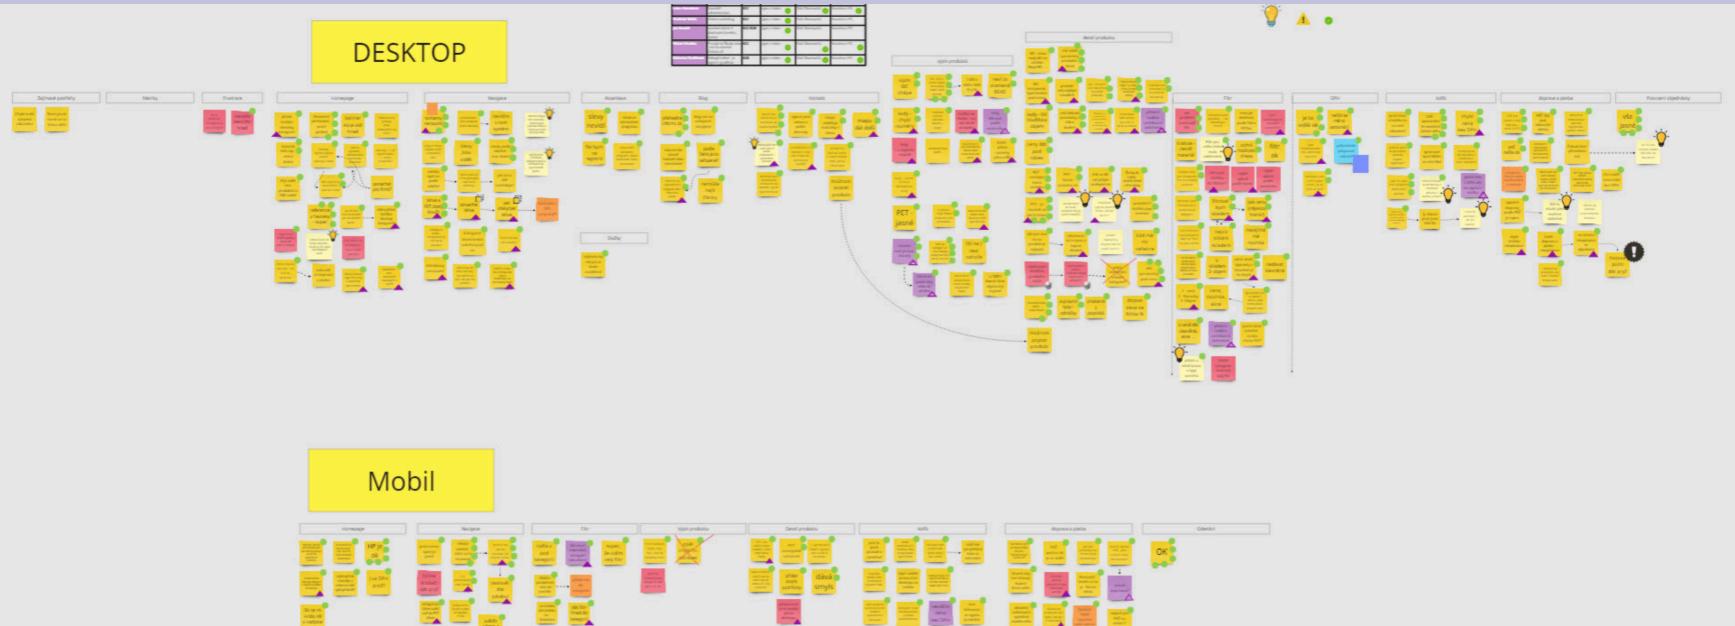

As to the main requirement and best practices we started mobile first and only than we worked on desktop version. That's the best way how to remove unnecessary clatter.

• Users followed path without major blocks. • Mobile version needed to be iterated more.

Next stage UI

UI was created by contractor who I worked with to make sure that we are on the same page.

- UI designer had also many great ideas for improvement.
- We had little space for more improvements and we did incorporate few of his ideas.
- Unfortunately he was not part of the whole UX process and we decided to use some of his ideas for possible A/B testing and future updates.

DEV time

The development of the project took quite longer than first expected. In fact it took 1.5 years.

- Client was very slow to react.
- I left to another project.
- Project manager ended up leaving as well and took the whole project and the client with him.
- The final and intended result is mainly there.
- Unfortunately I could not influence some other decision that happened along the way.

Lessons learned?

What did I learned from this project?

- Always make sure that DEV team is in the project from the very beginning
- Go through the process with the team prior to the project kick off so there is no surprises
- UI designer had great ideas but those can too late in the process so again make sure that UI designer is also on the project from the beginning
- Always set concrete milestones with client so the project wont drag too long and you can clearly see the end of it
